A School Vote

Use this reading for question 1.

The student council of a New Brunswick high school planned a vote on how to spend money raised at a fall fair. Two options were put forward: new books for the library, or new equipment for the gym. Council members visited classes to explain each option and to answer questions.

Some students argued that books would help every student, while others argued that gym equipment would improve health and school spirit. A few students said they had not heard enough about either option, so the council held a second information session before the vote.

In the end, more students voted for library books. The council published the result and the reasons students had given, and promised to revisit gym equipment in the next budget. Several students who had voted the other way said they accepted the result because the process had been open and fair.
