Reading II - Mapping Place Names

Use this reading for question 26.

A community mapping project brings youth and elders together. Elders share place names and the stories behind them, and youth mark the places on a map. One name describes a safe crossing. Another name recalls a gathering place for trading and feasting. A third name warns about a steep bank after rain.

The map is kept by the community for teaching. It is not made to sell the land or to invite strangers to use places without permission. The youth learn that a name can hold directions, history, and rules for safe and respectful use, all at once.

- An invented account of a community project in British Columbia

26 What does Reading II mainly show about place names?

- A only decoration on a map
- B information that is never shared
- C directions, history, and rules for respectful use
- D names with no practical purpose

Reading II - A Language Nest Opens

Use this reading for question 27.

In a small community hall, elders and young parents open a language nest for small children. Each morning, the adults speak only the language with the children as they play, eat, and sing. At first, some parents are shy about speaking, because they did not grow up hearing the language every day.

Over the months, the children begin to use greetings and songs on their own. Parents practise in the evenings and share new words with grandparents. One elder says that the nest does not erase the past, but it builds a future in which children grow up hearing the language from birth.

- An invented account of a community language program in British Columbia

27 What does Reading II mainly show?

- A community led renewal through daily use
- B language learning imposed by outsiders
- C children learning with no adult help
- D a program that erases the past

Reading I - Learning About the Indian Act

Use this reading for question 39.

A student reads that the Indian Act, passed in 1876, was a federal law that defined who counted as a status Indian, created reserves, and imposed elected band councils. The student learns that the Act also banned ceremonies such as the potlatch for many years, and that it controlled many parts of daily life.

In discussion, the class notes that the Act has been changed many times, but parts of it remain in force today. The teacher stresses that nations had their own governments and laws before the Act, and that many nations continue to work toward governing themselves in their own ways.

- An invented account of a classroom lesson in British Columbia

39 According to Reading I, what did the Indian Act define, create, and impose?

- A treaties signed by every nation
- B provincial laws only
- C a law with no lasting effects
- D status, reserves, and imposed band councils
