Source I - Homework and Sleep Study

Use this reading for questions 1 to 4.

Researchers surveyed 400 high school students about homework and sleep. Students were asked how many hours of homework they did each night and how many hours they slept. Students who reported more than three hours of homework also reported sleeping about one hour less on school nights than students with less homework. The researchers noted that their survey showed an association, not proof that homework alone caused the difference.

1 According to Source I, what did the study find?

A students with more homework reported sleeping less

B homework should be banned

C all students sleep eight hours

D homework improves grades

Source II - A Blog Post About Homework

Use this reading for questions 5 to 6.

Everyone knows homework ruins sleep. My cousin stayed up until midnight finishing assignments last week, and she was exhausted the next day. Schools clearly do not care about student health, and no one who has done homework could possibly disagree.

5 According to Source II, what kind of evidence does the writer use?

- A a large survey
- B a single anecdote about a cousin
- C a peer reviewed experiment
- D official school records

Draft Argument - Tutoring for All

Use this reading for question 8.

Schools should fund tutoring for all students who need it. In one district, students who received tutoring improved their test scores more than similar students who did not. Some argue that tutoring costs too much, but early help can prevent costlier failure later, when students must repeat courses. Funding tutoring is therefore a practical investment in student success.

8 According to the Draft Argument, what is the thesis?

A some students repeat courses

B schools should fund tutoring for all students who need it

C districts collect test scores

D tutoring is expensive
