Source I - Fund Summer Reading Programs

Use this reading for questions 1 to 4.

Every town should fund a summer reading program for students. During the long summer break, many students lose reading skills they gained during the school year, and this loss hits younger and lower income students hardest. A free, well staffed program gives every child books, guidance, and a reason to keep reading.

The results are clear. Towns with summer reading programs report that participating students return to school reading at or above their spring levels, while nonparticipants often fall behind. The programs also give families a safe and welcoming place to gather, and they cost far less than summer school classes for students who fall behind.

Critics say towns cannot afford another program. Yet the cost of doing nothing is higher: tutoring, repeated classes, and lost learning time all cost money too. A modest investment in books and staff now saves larger costs later and keeps every child on track. Towns should fund summer reading programs this year.
