When Ana was twelve, she wrote a long letter to her grandmother, who lived three states away. In the letter, Ana described her new school, her favorite books, and the garden she was growing behind her house.

Ana never sent the letter. She worried that her handwriting was messy and that her words were not good enough. She folded the letter, tucked it into a drawer, and forgot about it as the years passed.

Last summer, Ana found the letter while cleaning that same drawer. Reading her own young words made her laugh and ache at the same time. That evening, she called her grandmother and told her everything the letter had said, and more.

2 A sealed white envelope with a red wax seal and a black fountain pen lies on a dark wooden desk. According to Source IV, why did Ana never send the letter?

A she lost her grandmother's address and could not find it

B she had no paper left after writing the first page

C her grandmother told her not to write letters

D she worried her handwriting and words were not good enough
