Reading I - A Council Discussion

Use this reading for questions 1 to 3.

A First Nation council meets to discuss a land decision. Hereditary leaders, elected leaders, and youth representatives are all in the room. The hereditary leaders speak about long standing responsibilities to the territory. The elected leaders speak about services, housing, and budgets. Youth representatives speak about education and jobs for young people.

The council does not rush to a vote. Members ask questions, listen to elders, and check what the community has already decided in earlier meetings. In the end, the council agrees on a decision that tries to honour responsibilities to land while also meeting present needs. The decision is recorded so the community can review it later.

Reading II - Negotiating an Agreement

Use this reading for questions 19 to 21.

A nation enters talks about a resource project proposed on its territory. Community leaders ask for clear information about environmental effects, jobs, and benefits. They insist that talks happen early, before construction begins, and that the community has time to discuss the proposal together.

The nation also asks how the land will be protected during and after the project, and what happens if promises are broken. Leaders explain that a good agreement is not only about money. It must respect the nation authority to make decisions about its own territory and protect the land for future generations.
