Source I - Draft Opening of an Essay

Use this reading for questions 1 to 4.

Many schools should start later in the morning. Teenagers need sleep. Buses are a problem. Some students work after school. Later starts could help students pay attention. This paper will discuss sleep, buses, and jobs.

The writer of this draft knows the topic but has not yet shaped a clear argument. The ideas are listed rather than connected, and the reader cannot tell which reason matters most or what evidence will follow.

1 According to Source I, what is the main weakness of the draft opening?

- A it has no topic at all
- B its ideas are listed rather than connected, with no clear main claim or order
- C it is too long
- D it uses too much evidence, and the reader is overwhelmed by facts instead of following a clear argument

2 According to Source I, which revision would most improve the opening?

- A add more unrelated topics
- B state a clear thesis and preview reasons in logical order
- C remove the thesis entirely
- D repeat the first sentence five times

Source II - A Speech Draft

Use this reading for questions 5 to 8.

Friends, we have a choice. We can keep a park that is safe and clean, or we can let it fall apart and lose the one free place where our whole neighborhood gathers. I have volunteered in this park for three years, and I have seen children learn to ride bikes on its paths and older neighbors meet for morning walks.

Some will say repairs cost too much. They are right that money is tight. But the cost of losing the park, in safety, health, and community, is higher. Let us fix the paths, add lights, and keep this park open for everyone.

5 According to Source II, the speaker appeals to credibility mainly by

- A citing a scientific study
- B noting three years of volunteering in the park
- C threatening listeners
- D reading a poem
